Is there a gas shortage in Egypt?

Gas shortage mystery Despite Egypt's repeated emphasis on having a significant electricity surplus and natural gas exports of around 8 million tons worth $8.4 billion in 2022, there is currently a shortage in gas supply to power plants.

Will Egypt solve the energy problem by March 2024?

Another adjustment came in January 2024 when the government decided to restrict the power outages to morning hours to cater for the students' midterm exams. This seemingly thoughtful decision came hand in hand with raising electricity prices by 7 to 20 percent. Currently, Egyptian officials promise to solve the energy problem by March 2024.

Why did Egypt stop importing natural gas in 2023?

It also halted the gas it exports to Europe in the form of Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG) for the whole summer of 2023 period. After the production at the Tamar gas field, Egypt found itself obliged to double the country's daily power cuts to two hours while importing its first LNG cargo to cover the deficit.

What is Egypt's new load shedding program?

The Egyptian government has introduced a new load-shedding program this week, which involves power cuts at specific times throughout the day. File Photo: The Zamalek neighborhood of Cairo, during a power short cut, in Egypt. AP This requires citizens to check their watches before using elevators.

Why did Egypt achieve self-sufficiency in natural gas consumption in 2018?

Egypt announced the achievement of self-sufficiency in natural gas consumption in 2018 and the cessation of gas imports due to the gradual increase in local production and the discovery of gas fields, particularly the Zohr gas field in the Mediterranean.

What happened to Egypt's natural gas imports?

Despite becoming a net exporter of LNG in 2019, Egypt's imports of Israeli gas have also grown since 2020. This gas was then liquefied before getting exported to Europe. When Tamar flows stopped completely on October 29, the Egyptian government said its natural gas imports dropped to zero from 800 million cubic feet per day.
