The government recently unveiled the plan for the future of BPL, which includes the 25-year deal it is entering into with Pike Corporation, via its Bahamian management firm Island Grid Solutions, for the management and upgrade of New Providence's transmission and distribution (T& D) network.

Most of these solutions are designed to work with a grid characterized by high inertia provided by spinning generators. However, as solar PV and other inverter-based power generation resources increase in number on the grid, they often displace spinning generators, the source of high inertia, leaving grid operators who have small and islanded ...
