Mr Clayton's reliance on his advisors does not indicate any lack of intent on his part to create a trust, nor does his lack of knowledge of the legal detail. Mr Clayton had intended to create a trust when he established the VRPT, and therefore it is not a sham. The Supreme Court also noted that despite submissions to the contrary:

Introduction. As the New Zealand Supreme Court had granted leave, heard oral argument, and reserved judgment, I intended this article to be the first of a two-part comment, with the second due after the Supreme Court released its decision. I now understand that the parties settled the case before the Supreme Court issued its judgment, so for now the Court of ...
